

Figure S6. A PCA with trait loadings showed that inbred genotypes that were categorized as having a high root system stiffness had a greater stalk width and larger above-ground root systems (i.e., brace roots attached higher on the stalk at a steeper angle and wider spread width).